What is sake?

Japan's history of making sake dates back more than 2,000 years and there are approximately 1,500 breweries existing today. Sake is made from rice, water, yeast koji (mold) and uses distilled alcohol for the Non-Junmai category of sake.

Sake is very versatile when it comes to food matching. Sake can enhance the flavour of foods or can be used to cleanse the palate.

Sake has much less acidity and lots of lactic acid – not tartaric acid like in wine – which means a mouth-warming, delicate roundness is much more evident on the palate.

At Bay Nine Omakase we have collated an extensive collection of more than 40 sakes from a wide range of regions that best compliment Chef Oguro's cuisine.

天の戸

Asamai Shuzo Company was established in 1917. Soukou Kakizaki, the founder of the company, named the brand 'Amanoto', inspired by an old poem based on a Japanese myth. 'Amanoto' means 'Heavens Door'. Since 2011, Amanoto has only produced Junmaishu, a kind of sake brewed only with rice and water, with no alcohol adjustment. Amanoto does not filter any of its sake and all of its sake yeast is cultured in-house, to produce Amanoto's own unique flavour.
